Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination.
Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
It would be wife in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.
The object of any particular idea is called an individual; so Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.
2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjointed.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.
Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. v.
INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.
Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular;
that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man;
for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was,
and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.
INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.
How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.
I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewell on Providence.
TO INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuum, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.
Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More against Atheism.
No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and indivisuate him from all other writers. Dryden.
INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individue.] That which makes an individual.
What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.
INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuum, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.
INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.
How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Creesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisible.] State in which no
INDIVISIBLENESS. n. f. more division can be made.
A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician.
Locke.
INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.
By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.
Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.
INDOCIBLE. adj. [in and docible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.
INDOCIL. adj. [from indocilis, Fr. indocile, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.
These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.
INDOCILITY. n. f. [from indocilis, Fr. in and docility.] Unteachableness; refusal of instruction.
TO INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [from indocetrinere, old French.] To instruct;
to tincture with any science, or opinion.
Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young inexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.
They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth and co-operative excellency of their receptions. Glanv. Sceps.
INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinare.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities but temporary, and not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Bra.
INDOLENCE. n. f. [in and dolere, Latin; indolence, French.]
1. Freedom from pain.
As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.
Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.
The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Belingrope.
INDOLENT. adj. [French.]
1. Free from pain. Arbutnot.
2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless.
Ill fits a chief
To waste long nights in indolent repose. Pope's Iliad.
INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]
1. With freedom from pain.
2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.
While I'll'd by found, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.
TO INDOW. v. a. [from indovere, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.
INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]
1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.
Ebbes and floods there could be none, when there was no indraught, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.
2. Inlet; passage inwards.
Navigable rivers are to many indraughts to attain wealth.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
TO INDRENCH. v. a. [from rench.] To soak; to drown.
My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.
Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipathetical spirits. Harvey.
INDUBITABLE. adj. [from indubitabilis, Lat. indubitabile, Fr. in and dubitabile.] Undoubted; unquestionable.
When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitabile.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.
If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Watson's Architecture.
The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities.
Spratt's Sermons.
I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley's Sermons.
INDUBITATE. adj. [from indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain;
apparent; evident.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitate heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.
I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Watson.
TO INDUCE. v. a. [from inducere, Fr. induco, Latin.]
1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.
The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hook.
This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would the never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.
Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. To produce by persuasion or influence.
Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.
3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.
They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
4. To inculcate; to enforce.
This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce.
Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.
Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. To introduce; to bring into view.
To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.
The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.
7. To bring on; to superinduce.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.
INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.
The former inducements, do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason. Hooker.
Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade.
That mov'd me to, Shakef. Henry VIII.
Then mark th' inducement.
He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong
For us. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.
My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton's Agonist.
Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.
INDUCER. n. f. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.
TO INDUCT. v. a. [from inductus, Latin.]
1. To introduce; to bring in.
The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians. Sandy's Travels.
2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.
If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Paragon.
INDUCTION. n. f. [from inductio, Fr. induction, Latin.]
1. Introduction; entrance.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakef. Hen. IV.
2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations;
therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logic.
The inquiry by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon's Natural History.
Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration:
conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.
Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.
He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.
3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.
INDUCTIVE. adj. [from inductus.]
1. Leading; persuasive. With to.
A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milt. Par. Lost.
2. Capable to infer or produce.
Abatements may take away infallible conclusiveness in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TO INDUE. v. a. [from indue, Latin.]
1. To invest.
One first matter all,
Indue'd with various forms. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with indue or indue, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.
The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.
His powers, with dreadful strength indue'd,
She, with her fair hand, still'd into the nostrils of his friend. Chapman's Iliads.
TO INDULGE. v. a. [from indulgeo, Latin.]
1. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster.
The lazy glutton fate at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd. Pers.

IND

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. L. che.
To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Asterbury.
2. To grant not of right, but favour.
Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
The virgin entering bright, indulge'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fate,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Juv.
My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope's Odyssey.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Dunciad.
TO INDULGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence. With to.
He must, by indulging to any one sort of reproveable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.
INDULGENCE. n. f. [from indulgeo, Fr. from indulge.]
INDULGENCY. n. f. [from indulgeo, Fr. from indulge.]
1. Fondness; fond kindness.
Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milt. Parad. Lost.
The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryd. K. Arthur.
2. Forbearance; tenderness; opposite to rigour.
They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.
Hammond on Fundamentals.
In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.
3. Favour granted.
If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.
4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.
Thou, that giv'st whored indulgences to sin,
I'll canvas thee. Shakefpeare's Henry VI.
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.
In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but in reference to profit. Decay of Piety.
Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Asterbury.
INDULGENT. adj. [from indulgent, Fr. indulgent, Latin.]
1. Kind; gentle.
God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Mild; favourable.
Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.
3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to. With of.
The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden's En.
INDULGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity;
without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.
He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hanm.
INDULT. n. f. [Ital. and French.] Privilege or exemption.
INDULTO. n. f. [from indultus, Latin.]
TO INDURATE. v. n. [from indurare, Latin.] To grow hard; to harden.
Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay;
and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral-line.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO INDURATE. v. a.
1. To make hard.
A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous
one. Sharp's Surgery.
2. To harden the mind; to fear the conscience.
INDURATION. n. f. [from indurare.]
1. The state of growing hard.
This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.
2. The act of hardening.
3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying
crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.
INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [from industrius, Fr. industrious, Lat.] Diligent; laborious; assiduous. Opposed to slothful.
